- 9 Read the text. Are the sentences true (T) or false (F)?

What will our food be like in the future? This is a question that many people ask themselves. We might imagine that what we eat will be very different from today, and that scientists will develop a new way of producing food. It's true that our diet today is quite different from one or two hundred years ago. We eat a lot more sugar than people did then, and most of us get too many calories for our lifestyles. What's more, food technology has changed the way food is made, and a lot of the food in the supermarket is processed and contains all sorts of chemicals.

There are some developments that go further than this, however. For example, what about growing meat in the laboratory? Scientists have already done this and used the meat to make a hamburger, but is it good for our health? At the moment, nobody can answer that question, but a lot of people would feel very unhappy about eating something that 'grew' in the laboratory. On the other hand, if it is cheaper and cleaner to make such meat, maybe we should all start eating it. It would be better for the environment and possibly for our health. An even better solution for the planet is to stop eating meat completely, or to eat much less than we do now. Producing beef for our Sunday dinner takes a lot of energy and creates pollution that is changing our climate. Cutting down on the amount we eat would be a good idea, but many people can't imagine dinner without some form of meat. Persuading them to change their habits is an extremely difficult challenge.

- 1 People don't think that food in the future will be different. ____
- 2 In the past, people didn't eat much sugar. ____
- 3 Food from supermarkets is good for us. ____
